Conservation Officer Here.

Since the attorney general held in a recent opinion that the oil and gas conservation in this state comes under the head of the duties of the mine inspector and not under the duties of the corporation commissioner, the department of mines has been more active in this work. W. C. Connelly of Tulsa, who is at the head of this department, was here recently from Tulsa and went over the field. C. E. Sykes represents the department locally, but Mr. Connelly will make frequent trips to the field. Mr. Connelly, who holds his appointment under Ed Boyle, the oil and gas inspector, invites the hearty co-operation of the oil producers in the field. Mr. Connelly stated while here that he was ready to come to the field at any time he was needed, and that Mr. Sykes, who is in this field, is always ready to work with the producers. It is to the interest of producers as well as the people as a whole that wells be properly drilled, and that the gas and oil be protected from waste.
